Muslin, n. sindon.

Must, differently expressed (1) by the partic. fut. pass., = a necessity inferred from the circumstances of the case, e.g. people, we (you, etc.) — die, moriendum est; one — confess that every living creature is mortal, omne animal, confitendum est, esse mortale; the person by which a thing is to be done, in the dative, very seldom by ab, and only when a second dative would make the meaning ambiguous and obscure; e.g. every one — use his own judgment, suo cuique judicio utendum est; the property of many citizens is at stake, of which you — take every care, agitur bona multorum civium, quibus a vobis consulendum est (here a vobis on account of quibus, Cic., who in another passage has also two datives with the part. fut. pass.); if the verb is transitive, only unclassical writers add the object in the acc., whilst classical writers change the latter into the noun, with the partic. in the same gender and case, e.g. we — take the same road, hæc via (nobis) ingredienda (not hanc viam ingrediendum est); one — know nature, noscenda est natura; the speaker — consider three points, tria videnda sunt oratori; (2) by oportet (impersonal, δεῖ, expressing a necessity inferred from reason, or from the law, or from prudence or justice), with the acc. and inf., or merely with the subjunctive mood (especially to avoid ambiguity), e.g. this man — be bad, hunc hominem oportet esse improbum (I have my reasons to think so); this — (from inner reasons) and shall (because it is profitable) be done, hoc fieri et oportet et opus est; we — (dare) despise nothing in times of war, nihil in bello oportet contemni; there are things which one — (shall, dare, etc.) not do, even though they may be allowed; but whatever is not allowed, one should not do at all, est alqd quod non oporteat etiamsi licet; quidquid vero non licet, certe non oportet; he who does not know the way to the sea, — take the river as his guide, viam qui nescit, quâ deveniat ad mare, eum oportet amnem sibi quærere; the owner — be in good circumstances if he makes up his mind to make a good use of his acquired property, valeat possessor, oportet, si comparatis bene rebus cogitat uti; you — love me, not my money, if we are to be real friends to each other, me ipsum ames oportet, non mea, si veri amici futuri simus; (3) by debēre (ὀφείλειν), to express a moral obligation, e.g. you — honour him like your father, eum patris loco colere debes; if we were affected in seeing the misery of our allies, what — we now do when we see our own blood shed? sociorum miseriâ commovebamur, quid nunc in nostro sanguine facere debemus? Debēre, therefore, is nearly = officium, so that we can also express — by officium est alcjs and simply est alcjs, with this difference, that the former implies, it belongs to any one, it is any one's duty; the latter, it behoves any one, e.g. a stranger — mind only his own affairs, peregrini officium est (i.e. peregrinus debet) nihil præter suum negotium agere; a good orator — have heard and seen much, est boni oratoris (i.e. bonus orator debet) multa auribus accepisse, multa vidisse. Officium is generally left out when we say I, you —, meum, tuum, vestrum est; (4) by putare and existimare, in the rhetorical style, as a form of politeness, so that the hearers may be allowed to come to a conclusion themselves about a point, e.g. you see to what a pitch the republic — proceed, videte quem in locum rempublicam perventuram putetis; (5) by opus est (impersonal χρή), in speaking of any event subjectively felt, and from the supplying of which we expect great advantages; either with acc. and inf., or if the person, who — do, etc., a thing, is added in the dative, then ut with subjunctive mood, or abl. past partic. passive voice, e.g. if any thing should happen, which you — know (which it is useful for you to know), I'll write to you, si quid erit, quod te scire opus est, scribam; I — go and wash myself, mihi opus est ut lavem. Also "I — have so and so" may be rendered by mihi opus est, either impersonally with abl., or personally with the nominative of the person or thing that — be had, e.g. we — have a guide, dux et auctor nobis opus est; we — use your authority, auctoritate tuâ nobis opus est; (6) by necesse est (impersonal, ἀνάγκη ἐστί), expressing the most unavoidable necessity; either with acc. and inf., or simply with subjunctive mood, e.g. this mortal frame of ours — (necessarily) perish some time, corpus mortale alqo tempore perire necesse est; virtue — (necessarily) abominate and hate vice, virtus necesse est vitium aspernetur et oderit; man — necessarily die, homini necesse est mori. "I — necessarily have so and so" may likewise be rendered by necesse est; e.g. don't buy what you want, but what you — have as a matter of necessity, emas non quod opus est, sed quod necesse est; (7) by facere non possum, or simply non possum with quin, etc., or fieri non potest with ut non, etc., or non possum non with inf., to express what cannot be avoided, inward necessity, e.g. I — exclaim, non possum quin exclamem; I — thank you, non possum quin tibi gratias agam; you — have known him, fieri non potest ut eum non cognoris; I — confess that my joy was raised to the highest pitch, etc., non possum non confiteri, cumulari me maximo gaudio, quod, etc.; (8) simply by the verb, (a) in the indicative, inasmuch as in Latin we often leave it for the reader to supply in his own mind under what circumstances an action took place, e.g. I — confess, confiteor (Ter.), fateor (Cic.); I — regret, doleo (Cic.); I — express my surprise, miror (Liv.); I — declare my great astonishment, vehementer admiror; I — see, video; I — blame, reprehendo; I — fear lest not, etc., vereor, ut non; I — avoid my own native country, careo patriâ; this one thing I — remark, unum illud dicam; (b) in the subjunctive, if we only speak of a supposed necessity, e.g. a circumstance, at which not only all educated people, but even savages — blush, o rem dignam, in quâ non modo docti, verum etiam agrestes erubescant. Besides, we may bear in mind the following modes of speaking; (1) it — just happen or be, that, etc., casu accidit, forte evenit, ut, etc., or simply by forte; e.g. it — be that the ambassadors of Prusias dined with L. Quintus Flaminius, accidit casu, ut legati Prusiæ apud L. Quintium Flaminium cœnarent; it — happen that we were at the time on the estate of Privernas, forte evenit, ut in Privernate essemus; when I went away from you, it — happen that I met Phormio, ut abii abs te, fit forte obviam mihi Phormio; (2) you — (as urgent appeal), either simply by the imperative mood, or by fac ut, e.g. if you are not satisfied with that, you — accuse your own injustice, hæc si vobis non probabuntur, vestram iniquitatem accusatote; you — live in good hopes, magnum fac animum habeas et bonam spem; you — not (as an urgent warning, not to a thing), fac ne, etc. (mind that not, etc.), cave ne (take care lest, or not to, etc.), noli with inf., e.g. you — not wish, cave ne cupias; you — not forget that you are Cicero, nolite obliviscí Ciceronem esse; you — not wish impossibilities, nolite id velle quod fieri non potest; (3) that it —, as a great wish, with the subj., e.g. that it — tend to your benefit, sit tibi hoc saluti; (4) expressing indignation, that this . . . —, simply with inf., e.g. that this — have happened just now! hoc nunc maxime accidere! that that man — come just now! istum virum nunc quidem venire! (5) if it — be, in the future, si res ita feret.

No, adv. non, minime vero, minime . . . quidem (—, not at all), immo, immo vero, immo enimvero, immo potius (—, rather to the contrary); instead of our — in answer to a question, we generally repeat the verb of the preceding question, e.g. is your brother within? estne frater intus? —! non! or better non est! you are not angry, I hope! non iratus es! —! non sum iratus! don't you believe that? an tu hæc non credis? —, not at all, minime vero! are we at fault then? num igitur peccamus? —, not you! minime vos quidem; or are you still of the opinion that it is not necessary to make suitable laws for an excellent republic? an censes non necesse esse optimæ reipublicæ leges dare consentaneas? —! on the contrary I am quite of the opinion, immo prorsus ita censeo; so then you deceive him? siccine hunc decipis? —! on the contrary he deceives me, immo enim vero hic me decipit; for the phrase "—! that is not it," it would be bad to use non twice, and to say, non, non ita est, e.g. —! that is not it, ye judges; —! it is not indeed! non est ita, judices! non est profecto! to say yes or —, aut etiam aut non respondēre; one says yes, the other —, hic ait, ille negat; to say — to any thing that is offered us, to decline, abnuere or recusare alqd or de alqā re, negare se alqd facturum esse; to exclaim —! reclamare. No, None, adj., nullus, nemo (both as adj. and subst., but nullus may be said both of persons and things, nemo of persons only), non ullus, non quisquam (not one, if a greater stress is to be laid upon the negative; the former as an adj., the latter as a noun), neuter (neither, must always be used, if we speak of two individuals or of two parties); if nullus and nemo are used in a partitive sense, that is, if — stands in opp. to the remaining parts or the whole, they govern the genit., the same as "none," e.g. — mortal, nemo mortalium; — animal is more prudent, nulla beluarum prudentior est; the genit. may also sometimes be expressed by a circuml. with de, ex, e.g. — man of our army was killed, nemo de nostris cecidit; sometimes it would appear that instead of nullus and nemo we use in Latin nihil (with genit., when it stands for nullus); however, nihil expresses the negative stronger than nullus = none at all, e.g. there is — one (at all) more miserable than I am, and — one more happy than Catulus, nihil me infortunatius, nihil fortunatius est Catulo; to have — doubt (at all), nihil dubitationis habēre; very often we use — when the negative does not refer to any thing in general, but to something particular; in this case, which takes place principally when — belongs as an adj. to a noun or refers as a predicate to a noun previously mentioned, we use in Latin the negative non instead of nullus, e.g. I know that I am the bearer of — very joyful news, scio non jucundissimum nuncium me vobis allaturum; — snow falls on the high seas, nives in alto non cadunt; they had — honey, mel non habebant; you ordered them — ship, navem iis non imperasti. We likewise use non in Latin for — when the object in English is expressed by a verbal noun, e.g. to have — fear, non timēre; to feel — doubt, non dubitare; to feel — hatred against any one, non odisse alqm, etc.; and —, also —, et nullus, nec ullus (adj.), nec quisquam (subst.); — one, nemo quisquam, nemo unus; — man, nemo homo; at — place, nusquam; at — time, numquam, nullo tempore; and at — time, nec umquam; in — respect, nihil; in — wise, nullo modo, nullā ratione, neutrā ratione (of two). Nobody, n. nemo, nullus (no; as the genit. of nemo, neminis was little used, nullius was said instead), nemo homo, nemo unus, nemo quisquam (stronger than nemo, = — at all); and —, nec ullus, nec quisquam; — is also frequently expressed in Latin by nihil (or nil), e.g. — possessed greater faults and greater virtues than he, nihil illo fuit excellentius vel in vitiis vel in virtutibus; — was ever so much at variance with himself, nil fuit umquam sic impar sibi.

Noble, adj. nobilis (noble, with or without blood), generosus (one noble by birth). Nobility (of position or blood), n. nobilitas, genus nobile, generosa stirps; — by age, generis antiquitas; new —, nobilitas nova, — by lofty position, summo loco natum esse; nobility = loftiness of soul, generositas, ingenuitas. Nose, n. nasus (part of the face; then what is like a —), nares (nostrils, hence the —, an organ for breathing and smelling; also the sing., naris, if we speak of one nostril); a — that projects at the top and is pinched below, nasus a summo eminentior et ab imo deductior; a fine Roman —, nasus deductus ad omnem decorem; a flat —, nasus simus or collisus; a crooked —, nasus aduncus; one who has a flat —, simus; a sharp-edged —, nasus acutus; a large —, nasus magnus; one with a large —, nasutus, naso (as nickname); a fine —, nasus sagax, nares sagaces (one who easily finds things out, of animals and men), acutæ nares (fig., a fine taste, one who has the talent of observation, Hor.); one who has a fine —, sagax (lit., one who is quickly on the scent, then fig. = sharp), callidus or (but only vulgar) emunctæ naris (fig. of a fine observer, Hor.); to have a fine —, acutum habere nasum (lit.), festive omnium odorari (fig.); to blow one's —, nares or se emungere; to poke with the fingers in the —, digito nares inquietare; to bend the — upwards with the palm of the hand, nares planâ manu resupinare; to breathe loud (with the —), to sniffle, pulso subito spiritu nares excutere; to distend the —, nares diducere; to hold a thing to the —, alqd naribus or ad nares admovere; to put a thing into the —, dimittere alqd in narem or nares; the — is wet, nares hument; the — bleeds, sanguis ex naribus or per nares fluit or prorumpit, sanguis per nares erumpit; to turn up the —, naribus contemptum or fastidium ostendere (to express contempt or disgust, analogous to Quint.; corrugare nares, Hor., of some thing very disgusting, so as to cause the — to become wrinkled); to turn up the — at any one (from contempt), alqm suspendere naso (Hor.); to cock the —, superbire, on account of any thing, alqâ re (always with the abl. of the thing, that causes us to be proud, being added, unless it is already evident from the context), magnifice de se statuere, alqd sibi esse videri (to have a high opinion of one's self); he carries his — high, altiores spiritus gerit (Tac.); —band, vinculum nasi*; bridge of the —, os nasi*; he has broken the bridge of his —, nasus ei collisus est; bleeding of the —, fluens sanguis per nares, narium sanguis, profluvium sanguinis e naribus; something stops the bleeding of the —, alqd narium sanguinem sistit; the juice of it instilled into the —, when it is held up, stops the bleeding, succus ejus instillatus naribus supinis profluvium sanguinis sistit; somebody's — bleeds, alci sanguis ex naribus or per nares fluit or prorumpit, alci sanguis per nares erumpit; whoever has suffered in his childhood from bleeding of the —, but lost it afterwards, has either to suffer from headache, or, etc., quibus in pueritiâ sanguis ex naribus fluxit, dein fluere desiit, hi vel capitis doloribus conflictantur, vel, etc.; wing of the —, nasus imus; swelling in the —, ozæna, narium ozæna (ὄζαινα), polypus (πολύπους, polypus of the —); the hairs in the —, nostrils, vibrissæ; tendon of the —, cartilāgo narium*; tip of the —, nares primores (according to Lucret., who uses nasi primoris in the gen. sing., whence it may be inferred that the term can be used in all the oblique cases); rap over the —, fillip, talitrum; to fillip one, talitrum alci infringere*; dripping of blood from the —, stillans per nares sanguis*; end of the —, pinnula narium*; to lead any one by the —, alqm eludere et extrahere (to make a fool of any one and keep him waiting), alqm lactare et falsâ spe producere (Ter., to keep any one in suspense with false hopes), alqm variis dilationibus frustrare, alqm variis frustrationibus differre (to keep any one waiting day after day).

Nosegay, fasciculus (florum); to tie a — for any one, flores nectere.

Nostrils, n. nares; to inflate the —, nares inflare, nares diducere.

Not, adv. non, haud (the former in general, the latter = — exactly, and only in certain comb., chiefly before adv. and adj., to modify their meaning, e.g. — much, haud multum; — far, haud longe; nullus, as frequently used by modern writers, in ancient writers not merely = non, but = — at all, e.g. Philotimus non modo nullus venit, sed, etc., Cic.), minus (less, not as strong as non), nihil (like Greek οὐδέν, stronger than —, = by no means), neutiquam, haudquaquam, nequaquam, minime (also stronger than —), ne (differs from the other words expressing —, inasmuch that these deny some fact, whilst ne only refers to a subjective feeling, and expresses a request, wish, command, e.g. don't resist, if, etc., ne repugnetis, si, etc.; dare —, ne audeto; I do — wish to be alive, if, etc., ne vivam, si, etc.; you should — have asked for it, ne poposcisses), fac ne, with subjunctive mood (see Lest, etc.), or cave (ne) with subj. (take care lest, etc.), or noli (with infin., do — wish, all three only = an invitation, a request, etc, uttered in a modest manner, instead of ne, also = don't just, e.g. do — mind any thing else, but only this, that, etc.; fac ne quid aliud cures, nisi ut, etc.; don't be tempted to, cave cupias; don't believe it, cave credas; don't wish for a thing that cannot be done, nolite id velle, quod fieri non potest; but parce or fuge with infin. are Hellenisms, which are foreign to classical prose). In questions — is expressed (1) by annon (perhaps—), when the person, that asks, wishes something that has taken place or been mentioned before, as to whether any thing is so or —, although he may be convinced that it is as he thinks, e.g. did I — say perhaps that it would happen so? annon dixi hoc futurum? (2) by nonne, —, if we put a question with a view to convince any one that we are right, e.g. what, does — the dog resemble the wolf? quid, canis nonne lupo similis! or also, e.g. with verbs that express a perception, if we wish to give the person that asks us to understand that he sees a thing but does — think of it, e.g. you, who are of opinion that the gods neglect the affairs of mankind, do you — perceive, etc.? tu qui deos putas humana negligere, nonne animadvertis, etc? (3) by ne (e.g. with verbs that express a perception, if we are not certain whether the person spoken to perceives the thing, or when we think that he is not sufficiently aware of it, e.g. do you — see that very often in Homer Nestor makes a boast of his virtues? videsne ut apud Homerum sæpissime Nestor de virtutibus prædicet? (4) by non, if we think that the person does — at all perceive the thing to which we wish to direct his attention, e.g. don't you see how great the danger is when, etc., non vides quanto periculo, etc. (the person spoken to is — aware of the danger); but non is also frequently used when we speak in a lively manner, e.g. it is — complete nonsense, non est amentia; we must also notice that in using annon and nonne, we expect an answer in the affirmative, whilst in using ne and non we expect a negative answer; when several questions are put in succession, the interrogative particle is repeated in every question if it is used in an emphatical manner, but after nonne we use only non in the other questions. — on any account, minime, minime gentium, fac or cave ne with subjunct., noli with inf.; — by any means, nullo pacto, nullo modo (in nowise), nihil; — at all, neutiquam; — so very (before an adj. or adv.), haud or non ita (parum is bad in this sense), e.g. — so very far, haud (non) ita longe; — sufficiently, — quite, non satis, parum (too little, opp. nimis); — even, ne .... quidem (the word upon which the stress lies must be placed between ne and quidem, e.g. I don't even consider this profitable, ne utile quidem hoc esse arbitror); — once, non semel (several times), ne semel quidem (— once even); — so, i.e. (1) — in this manner, non ita, non sic; (2) = less, minus; e.g. — to stray so far, minus late vagari; but —, non vero, neque vero, non autem (the second in passing to something else; non autem sometimes separated by a word which is put between, e.g. but I can — tell you, non possum autem dicere; if "but —" is merely used to introduce an antithesis, non alone is used; e.g. I mean the father, but — the son, dico patrem, non filium); but ... —, = however ... —, nec or neque; — either, nec or neque (the latter chiefly in passing to something else, = and neither, e.g. Epicurus says, we do — require understanding, and — words either, Epicurus negat opus esse ratione, neque disputatione; fortune does — give us virtue, and therefore does — take it away either, virtutem fortuna non dat, ideo nec detrahit; but also ... —, nec ... quidem (the words upon which the stress lies is placed between nec and quidem, especially in opp. to something else, e.g. but also Jugurtha did — remain quiet in the mean time, sed nec Jugurtha quidem quietus interea; etiam non is barbarous); and —, et non (when the negative refers to one word only, as when the stress lies upon the negative), neque (to connect two sentences or two parts of the same sentence, e.g. via certa et non longa = a safe road and one that is — very long, but via certa neque longa = a road both safe and short; ac non must not be confounded with either of these, see below); and so —, and therefore —, ac non (to express an inference, e.g. there was nobody who would have taken him to be accused of a crime, and who would — therefore think that he had been condemned over and over again, nemo erat qui illum reum, ac non millies condemnatum arbitraretur; and — rather, ac non potius, or simply ac non; and — less, atque etiam, itemque (and so also, likewise also; not atque ideo, = and even, nor nec non, which in the sense of "likewise, so also" is foreign to classical prose); because —, quod non; — ..., but, non ..., sed; — ..., but rather, non ..., sed potius; — ..., but still, non ..., at; non ..., sed tamen; — ..., but still at least, non ..., sed certe; — ..., but — even, non ..., sed ne ... quidem; — ..., neither, non ..., nec quidem (the word upon which the stress lies must stand between nec and quidem); — ..., if —, or — ..., except if or when or that, non ... nisi; — by any means ..., unless it were that, etc., haud ..., nisi; — that (in order that) ..., but in order that (or lest), non ut ... sed ut (or sed ne); non est ..., verum ut; — that ..., but in order that the more, non ut ..., sed quo (for sed ut eo); — lest ..., but in order that, non quin ..., sed ut; — that — ..., but still, non quin ..., sed or sed tamen; — that perhaps ..., but still, non quo .., sed tamen; — that ..., but on the contrary, non quo ..., sed contra; — because ..., but in order that, or but lest, non quia ..., sed ut or sed ne; — because ..., but because, non quia ..., sed quia; non quod ..., sed quod; non quod ..., sed quo; — ... on account of, but because, or but in order that, or but lest, non alcjs rei causâ, sed quod; non alcjs rei causâ, sed ut or sed ne; — as if — ..., but because, non quin ..., sed quia or sed quod; — on that account that, or — because ..., but in order that, non quo (or non quod) ..., sed ut (or but lest, sed ne); — on this account that ..., but because, non ideo quod ..., sed ut; — on this account, in order that ..., but lest, non ideo ut ..., sed ne; — as if ..., but in order that, non quasi ..., sed ut; I say, that —, etc., I maintain that it is —, etc., expressed in Latin by nego with acc. and inf., e.g. my friend said that he would or should — do it, meus amicus negabat se hoc facturum esse; in connexion with an adj. — is often rendered in Latin by one word, containing — and the adj. e.g. — prudent, amens (silly), demens (foolish), — pleasant, injucundus, ingratus (we ought, however, to be very cautious in using these adjs. compounded with the particle in, as they are not very common in the golden age, e.g. — tired, non defatigatus, not indefessus, which is not classical): in comp. with a noun — is rendered in Latin by non, but so that non is separated from the noun; — yet, see Yet.

Notary, n. scriba publicus (appointed by the state), signator (one who draws up a marriage-contract or a will), scriba censualis (in whose presence wills were opened and placed on record, late; notarius and actuarius were in ancient times a kind of short-hand writer); the office of a —, munus scribæ publici* or signatoris; the seal of the —, signum signatoris (Jct.).

Notation, n. inscriptio alcjs rei (upon); = the act of noting down, scriptio, perscriptio, subscriptio (the writing down of one's name, nominis); — of one's fortune, property through the censor, census. Note, n. (1) in music, soni* or vocis signum; to play or sing from notes, ex libello canere* (not from memory), ab oculo canere* (at sight); (2) — of an ambassador, literæ; — book (for music), liber modorum musicorum*; a compiler of notes (in a contemptuous sense), inutilium commentariorum conscriptor; copier of notes, qui modos musicos describit*. To note, v.tr. notare, annotare (post-Aug., but classical). Notes, n.pl., plagulæ junctæ* (several sheets of paper tied together), pugillares (tablet, pocket-book or slate, in or on which the young men in the schools of the philosophers wrote down what was dictated to them, e.g. aliqui tamen et cum pugillaribus veniunt, non ut res excipiant, sed verba, Sen.), libellus (a little work, or book containing written notes, e.g. sermonem ex libello habēre, to read a lecture, sermon from one's notes, Suet.), commentarii, commentaria or commentariola -orum, n. (notes, short sketches written down, both any remarkable incidents in one's course of studies, and notes taken down from a lecture, e.g. iisdem de rebus semper quasi dictata decantare (always to read again the same notes) neque a commentariolis suis discedere (to depart from the text in his notes), Cic.; sunt velut regestæ in hos commentarios, quos adolescentes deduxerant, scholæ, Quint.), dictata -orum, n. (dictations of a professor written down by the student, also perhaps dictata præceptoris academici calamo excepta); any one's college-notes, scholæ professorum in commentarios alcjs regestæ (rendered according to Quint.).

Notch, n., see Indent, Incision. To notch, v.tr. striare (to make notches), incīdere (to make incisions, e.g. in a tree); notched leaves, folia striata; the act of notching, striatura (especially the manner in which the notches are made).

Nothing, n. nihil, nil, nihilum, nulla res; — at all, prorsus nihil; since nihil must be considered as a noun, it is used with adjectives or with a gen., e.g. — of the kind, nihil tale; to think — mean, nihil humile cogitare; he has done — new, nihil novi fecit; to anticipate — good, nihil boni divinare; to rise from —, ex nihilo oriri; out of — comes —, de nihilo nihil fit, de nihilo nihil creari potest; to dwindle down to a mere —, ad nihilum venire or redigi or recidere, in nihilum interire or occidere, pæne ad nullum redire numerum (in number); in one moment to be reduced to —, nullum repente fieri; to be as good as —, pro nihilo esse; this is as good as —, id alqd nihil est; for —, i.e. without a cause, sine causā, e.g. to take a deal of pains all for —, laborare; with comparatives, nihilo, e.g. — greater, nihilo majus; — less, nihil minus, nihil vero minus; — but, nihil nisi (but not nihil quam); — else but, nihil aliud nisi, nihil aliud quam (the latter if in the words preceding, tam, so much, is to be understood); — except, nihil præter, præterquam; and —, nec quidquam (et nihil is not Latin); I have — to fear, nihil est quod timeam; I have — to say in reply, nihil est quod respondeam; to care — about a thing, i.e. (1) = to consider as —, pro nihilo putare or ducere; (2) = not to care about a thing, to neglect a thing, non laborare de alqā re, alqd negligere or non curare; he will be — (one cannot have good hopes of him), non bene de eo sperare licet; to be —, i.e. (1) = to avail, to be considered —, nihil esse, nihil posse; (2) = not to hold any public office, privatum esse, ad rempublicam non accessisse; (3) = to be good for —, nihili esse, inutilem esse; signifying —, e.g. a word, vox inanis; a man who is worth —, homo tenuis or obscurus; good for —, inutilis (useless, hence also pernicious, injurious), nequam, nihil (a good-for-— fellow, all of persons and things).

Nourishment, n. alimentum; any thing contains much —, in alqā re est multum, plurimum alimenti.

Novel, adj. novus; see New, Uncommon. Novel, n. fabella (a short story), in the modern sense, fabula Romanensis* (better than fabula Milesia, which means rather a legend); a novelist, fabularum Romanensium scriptor*; in the shape of a novel, fictitious, fabulosus (fabulous), fictus (fictitious); adv. fabulose, ut in fabulis fit. Novelty, res nova, see New.

Novice, n. homo novus (not found with the dative in any classical writer, but with in and the ablative nowhere; it is only used in an absolute sense to signify one who has only just become a thing, etc., or who is still inexperienced), novicius (one who has only just become a thing, or has just arrived at, come into a place, e.g. servus novicius or mancipium novicium, i.e. a slave who is still a —), novellus (one who has just arrived, established himself, settled at a place, Liv.); a — in military service, tiro, miles novus (opp. miles veteranus); an army of novices, exercitus tiro; a — in any thing, tiro or rudis, or comb. tiro et rudis in alqā re (a mere beginner in any thing), peregrinus or hospes, or comb. peregrinus atque hospes in alqā re (inexperienced, not versed in any thing, e.g. fateor enim, callidum quendam hunc, et nullā in re tironem ac rudem, neque peregrinum atque hospitem in agendo esse debēre, Cic.). Novitiate, n. tempus ad alcjs facultates experiendum constitutum*, tempus tirocinii* (the former a year fixed in order to test the abilities of any one, to see what he can do, of an apprentice; the latter the year, in which any one, e.g. a young teacher, is to show and give proof of his skill).

Now, nunc (in opposition to tunc; at this moment, the time present with the writer, as tunc refers to time present in regard to the person or thing referred to); jam (a particle of transition, up to now, from now), hoc tempore, in præsentiâ, in hoc tempore, in præsenti; hodie (to-day); nunc demum (that is, now for the first time, now at length, in contradistinction to tum or tunc primum); now especially, nunc quum maxime or quum maxime; but now, modo; just now, nunc ipsum, hoc ipso tempore; from now, jam inde, ab hoc tempore. Now (as a particle of connexion or inference), igitur, or by a periphrasis, quæ quum ita sint (as these things are so). If you wish to assign the cause, employ inde, proinde. As a particle of mere transition, use autem or vero; but sometimes no particle at all is used, e.g. whatever he may now say, quidquid dicat; you may now (or then) be present or not, adsis necne. As a particle of affirmation or concession, "now" has for its equivalent vero or nunc; nunc vero, now in fact; nunc autem, but now. With a question, quid vero! now what! or quid autem! now what in the world! quid tandem? In exhortations, as, come now, age, agite. Now four years ago, quatuor abhinc annis, ante hos quatuor annos.

One, adj. (as a numeral), unus -a -um; not used in Latin except for emphasis, e.g. the matrons mourned Brutus for a year, Matronæ annum Brutum luxerunt (which would become unum annum if used to contradict the mourning being for two years). In such phrases as "a Cato, a Gallus," etc., the Latins generally employed the plural, e.g. numeremus Paullos, Catones, Gallos, let us enumerate "a Paullus, a Cato, a Gallus." A certain —, quidam, e.g. in domo cujusdam, nomine Cameli, in the house of a certain —, by name Camelus; some —, aliquis, unus aliquis; aliquis ex vobis, some — of you; unus aliquis ex tuis, some — of thy friends; aliquis priorum regum, some — of the former kings; any —, quispiam, e.g. forsitan quispiam dixerit, any — may perhaps say; iniquum me esse quispiam dicet, any — will say that I am unjust; so dicet aliquis forte, some — will perchance say; each —, quisque, e.g. de captivis ut quisque liber aut servus erat, suæ fortunæ a quoque supplicium sumptum est, of the captives each was executed according to his condition, as each was a free man or a slave. After the particles si, nisi, ne, num, quando, ubi, and generally in conditional propositions, even without a conjunction, use quis instead of aliquis or quispiam, e.g. ubi semel quis pejeraverit, ei postea credi non oportet, when once any — has sworn falsely, he ought not afterwards to be believed. In negative sentences, and in such as contain a negative sense, "any —" is to be rendered as a noun by quisquam, and "any" alone as adjective by ullus, e.g. estne quisquam omnium mortalium de quo melius existimes tu? is there any — of all mortals of whom you think better? so an est ulla res tanti? is there any thing so important? "As any —" is rendered quam qui maxime, e.g. tam sum amicus reipublicæ quam qui maxime, I am as friendly to the state as any —. No —, nemo. One = alter (when there are only two objects), e.g. altero pede claudus, lame in — foot. Unus ille, that one, e.g. unum illud addam, I will add only that — thing; me una hæc res torquet, this — thing torments me; uno verbo, in — word; uno tenore, in — tone; not even —, ne unus quidem, non ullus, nemo unus (not a single person); not — of us, nemo de nobis unus; not — of them, ii nulli; — and another, unus et alter, unus alterque (both together); some —, several, non nemo, unus et item alter; — after the other, alius post alium, alius ex alio, alii super alios, aliusatque alius, alius subinde; singuli deinceps (— by — in a series), alternis (sc. versibus, when two sing alternately); — as much as the other, uterque pariter, ambo pariter; the — ... the other, alter ... alter; hic ... ille, prior ... posterior, alii ... alii; alii ... pars (or partim), pars ... alii, quidam ... alii; — the other, alter alteri or alterum (of two), alius alii or alium, e.g. alter alterum or alius alium adjuvat, the — assists the other; so timent inter se, they fear — another; if "other" refers to a substantive, repeat the substantive, e.g. manus manum lavat, — hand washes the other; so civis civi paret and ex domo in domum migrant; at — time ... at another, alias ... alias, e.g. alias beatus, alias miser. The — this, the other that, alius aliud, alii alia, alius alitter (in different manners), alius alio (— — way, another another), aliter alibi, aliud alias; aliunde aliunde periculum est (dangers vex me from different quarters), alius alia causa. "One" may also be used with a kind of relative force, e.g. many elephants were there; did you not see —? plures aderant elephanti; num unum vidisti? Aliquis also may be used in this way, e.g. hi sunt tui libri; num alqm ex iis legisti? here are your books; have you read any — of them? — and the same, unus atque idem, unus idemque; uno eodemque tempore, at — and the same time; it is — and the same, idem est, par est; — ... and another, aliud ... aliud, e.g. aliud est virgines rapere, aliud pugnare cum viris, it is — thing to carry off virgins, and another thing to — with men; ejusdem coloris, of — and the same colour; to be — and the same, nihil differre, nihil interesse; labour and pain are not — and the same, interest alqd inter laborem et dolorem; it is all — to me, mea nihil interest; to be always at — thing, uno opere eandem incudem diem noctemque tundere. Once, adv. (1) (as numeral), semel; — one is one, unitas semel posita unitatem facit; — and for all, semel (e.g. ut semel dicam); — more, iterum (again, for the second time), denuo, de novo (anew, afresh); already —, semel jam; more than —, semel atque iterum, semel iterumve, semel et sæpius, non semel (not —, but often, e.g. pati alqd); — or, at all events, not often, semel, aut non sæpe certe; not more than —, non plus quam semel; not —, non semel, ne semel quidem (not even —); at —, all at once, repente subito (suddenly, e.g. why has this been done all at —? quid repente factum?); simul (at the same time, e.g. trium simul bellorum victor, Liv.); to settle the matter at —, rem uno impetu perfringere (Cic.); to settle two things at —, de eâdem fideliâ duos parietes dealbare (prov., Curio in Cic.); all the people at —, omnes simul (at the same time), omnes universi (together); one at a time (or at —), singuli, unus post alterum (one after the other); many at —, multi simul; (2) (of time), aliquando, and after ne or si simply quando (some time, past or future, which we are not able or willing to specify, e.g. did you — hear of him? num ex eo audivisti aliquando?), quandoque (some time or other, e.g. he will —, i.e. some time, remember the kindness he received, quandoque beneficii memor futurus est; if — the enemy had invaded Italy, quandoque hostis terræ Italiæ bellum intulisset), quondam (some time past, e.g. that virtue — existed in this republic, fuit ista quondam in hac republicâ virtus), olim (at some remote time past or future, opp. nunc, nuper; hence in fables or narratives, = — upon a time); — at last, tandem aliquando; if —, si quando, and simply quando, quandoque (suppose that —), quum (when); now since —, quando, quandoquidem. First, adj. primus (standing at the head of a series; primus is the superlative of prior, from the obsolete pris as seen in pridem, pridie, pristinus); he is said to have been the — to bind, primus dicitur obligavisse; in the poets and in post-Ciceronian Latin, primus often stands for primum, e.g. vix prima inceperat æstas (Virg.), spolia quæ prima opima appellata (Liv.); primus is also often used partitively, e.g. primâ nocte, in the early part of the night (so primo mense, primus tumultus, the beginning of the month, etc.), princeps (primus et caput, the first head or leader, hence our word "prince"); he went — into battle, princeps in prœlium ibat; qui princeps est in agendo, he who has the lead; princeps Siciliæ se ad amicitiam populi Romani applicuit, was the first to; princeps also signifies "chief," e.g. Eudoxus in astrologiâ princeps (so princeps civitatis, principes conjurationis, the heads); the — men in the state, principes (-um, m.) civitatis or in civitate. The —, used of two, prior; the — but one, a primo proximus; — of all, adv. imprimis; in the — place, primum, primo; —born, natu maximus; the — fruits, primitiæ (e.g. armorum; tori, of the nuptial couch; vitis; spolia et primitiæ, the — fruits of the victory).

Phil. 3, 15, 39, we find it only because the other nouns in connexion with it are expressed in the pl.); not —, gratiam negligere; to earn, deserve —, gratiam capere; nobody will thank you for it, ingratum erit; to accept, receive with —, in gratiam accipere, grate accipere or excipere; with my most hearty —, gratissime accipere (e.g. munus); — God! est diis gratia! my very best —! (in returning a compliment), see before. Thankful, adj. gratus; see Grateful. Thankfulness, n., see Gratitude. Thanksgiving prayer, preces grati in Deum animi testes*, also gratulatio, supplicatio (for victories, for deliverance from sickness); to appoint — to be read in the churches, gratulationem (supplicationem) decernere; letter of thanks, literæ quibus grate animo alcjs beneficia prosequimur*. Thankless, adj., see Ungrateful.

That, demonstr. pron. ille, illa, illud, iste, ista, istud (ille, without being in opp. to hic, often used when we speak of something very well known, very celebrated, of any thing or person remote as regards time or place, but present in the mind of the speaker; iste = that, only when we speak of a third person or thing, with the idea of contempt or disapproval, — man there), alter (the other of two), pl. alteri, if we speak of several on the other side); is, ea, id, hic, hæc, hoc; those who, illi qui (or the relative clause preceding) qui, ii, — of, the word — not expressed, e.g. jacet corpus dormientis ut mortui (not ut id m.), subscripsere quidam L. Bruti statuæ: Utinam viveres! item ipsius Cæsaris, etc. (— of C. or C.'s, Suet.); — is my father, hic est meus pater; — only is true friendship, hæc demum est amicitia firma; often by sic, e.g. — is his way, sic est ingenium ejus; — is the way of people, sic est vita hominum; = such a one, etc., is, ea, id; of — age, id ætatis; at — time, id temporis; we are at — age, id jam ætatis sumus.

That, rel. pron. qui, quæ, quod, see Who.

That, conj., to connect the main clause: A, when the sentence with — contains the subject of the copula in the main sentence; (1) when the sentence with — conveys a general idea, render by the inf., e.g. officii est, etc., or by another noun, e.g. nihil suavius est quam amari or amor; (2) when the sentence with — refers merely to one particular person, by the acc. and inf., e.g. after "it is pleasing, rejoicing, grieving, probable, clear, manifest, evident, true, it appears, it is useful, right, reasonable, necessary, lawful, it is allowed" (licet with acc. and inf., when we speak in general; the person in the dat. if we only refer to one person mentioned); after several of these impersonal verbs, use also quod and ut, see under D and E (e.g. it is pleasing to hear that you are well, gratum est te valēre); (3) than —, as —, inf. with an adv. or another noun with an adj. or part., e.g. nulla res tanto erat damno, etc., quam (a noun with an adj. or part.). B, when the sentence with — contains the object of the verb of the main clause; either the noun in the acc. with or without possessive pron., or another noun in the gen., or the acc. and inf.; (1) this is the case after all verba sensuum et affectuum, to which belong also "to know, conceive, remind, expect, hope, fear, believe," etc.; then also after fac, when it is = finge, fancy —, etc., fac qui ego sum esse te; after the verbs "to hope, swear, promise, threaten," we use the acc. and FUT. inf., only after "to hope" we use the acc. and PRES. inf. when we speak of any thing referring to the present time, and the acc. and PERF. inf. when we speak of any thing past; (2) after the so-called verba declarandi, as "to say, tell, indicate, remember, convince, teach, prove (efficere)," etc.; (3) also after "to fix, determine, wish, forbid, impose, concede (that any thing is so)," etc., the inf., if the sentence with — declares the object, whilst if it contains a wish or intention, we use ut; after "they," "the people say," "it is reported," etc. (dicunt, tradunt, ferunt, produnt, perhibent), either by acc. and inf., or the nom. and inf. (of the passive voice), e.g. dicunt Romulum primum regem Romanum fuisse or Romulus primus rex Romanorum fuisse dicebatur; dicunt vos adfuisse or vos dicebamini adfuisse; after dubito, in the sense "I doubt not," we find in Cic. always quin, only in the sense "I do not hesitate" merely the inf. C, when the sentence with — contains a statement, either explanatory or referring to circumstances, by the gerund or the part. fut. pass., as when we say "they obtained it by this means, that," etc. (abl. of the gerund). D, when the sentence with — contains a description of any thing or a circuml., (1) of the subject, when we can put "which" instead of "that," by quod, as after "there is reason," or "there is no reason," (which, etc.), est (habeo); non est, nihil est (we may also use cur, as in English); also after "it is pleasing, rejoicing, I am glad, it is painful," etc. (e.g. nihil est quod [i.e. illud quod] timeas); also after "we must add (eo or huc accedit)," where we use quod when we speak of a matter of fact, and ut when we refer to any thing that is only in progress, always when the thing is only about to happen; (2) of the object when — is = "because;" also by quod after "to be glad, rejoice (gaudēre), to feel sorry, grieve (dolēre), to wonder (mirari)," etc., where we use quod (ὅτι) when we speak of a definite fact, but si (εἰ) if we speak of something merely imaginary or as we suppose it; also after "to thank, congratulate, praise, accuse;" (3) when — stands for "inasmuch as, inasfar as," also by quod, as when we say "never that I know," e.g. non ego te, quod (quantum) etiam, umquam vidi. E, always ut when the sentence with — expresses the condition, aim, effect or consequence, surmise, permission, encouragement, wish or command, as subject or object, or as additional clause; after is sum, non is sum, talis, qualis, is (such a one), ejusmodi, etc.; also qui, etc. (ut is, etc.), after tam, tantus (generally after negations, after quis? and after comparatives with quam, when these words express the degree, measure, up to which any thing is said to possess a certain quality; but we say also ut is, etc., when we speak of a result, or to avoid ambiguity, esp. when qui does occur besides); — not, after "to fear, to be afraid," etc., ne non, seldom ut, and — alone, ne; only — not, that — by any means, ut ne (ne being placed before that which is prevented), e.g. ut hoc ne facerem (he took care —, etc.); I say that . . . not, etc., by nego with acc. and inf., e.g. he asserts that there are no gods, deos esse negat. F, when — is = to "since," quum, ex quo, e.g. anni sunt plures ex quo eum non vidi. G, — in exclamations, (1) when we express a wish, oh —! ut! utinam! o si (see Oh!); God grant —, etc., faxit Deus, ut, etc.; — not! utinam ne! (2) in general exclamations, by acc. and inf. (which apparently is not governed by any preceding verb), e.g. me miserum! te in tantas ærumnas propter me incidisse!

With, prep. (A) in union. (1) cum, una cum; often simply rendered by the abl. with an adj., e.g. omnibus copiis egredi; (2) in friendly intercourse, cum; after verbs compounded with cum, either cum with abl. or simply the dative, e.g. what have I to do — you? quid tibi mecum est rei? after words expressing similarity or equality, the simple dat. (but after similis and its compounds, also the genit.); when two things are represented as being equal to one another, by idem (the same, etc.), the prep. "with" is rendered by qui or a copulative conjunction, seldom by cum with abl. (in Greek and only in poets simply by the dat.); (3) in participation, (a) in confederacy with, cum, e.g. cum algo bellum gerere adversus algm; (b) = by means of, (α) of a person, per with acc., alcjs operā, alcjs ope, auxilio, algo auctore (e.g. hanc lectionem auctore Ruhnkenio recepi,* where it would be bad to say cum Ruhnkenio); also sometimes by the simple ablat. (e.g. Cæsar eā legione, quam secum habebat, murum perduxit in altitudinem, etc.); to speak —, i.e. to use any one's words (in a speech, etc.), by alcjs verbis uti (not, as modern writers, by cum algo loqui), e.g. to speak — Horace, ut Horatii verbo or verbis utar (Quint.), or simply auctore Horatio, Cic.; (β) of a thing, either by the simple ablat. (when merely expressing instrumentality) or by per with acc. (when expressing the mode of an act), e.g. per contumeliam; (4) in a hostile sense, cum, contra, adversus with acc. (the two latter used when cum might be misunderstood, as it might also mean "in union with," etc.), e.g. bellum gerere cum algo or contra (adversus) algm; after a substantive, such as "war," "contest," it may also be rendered by cum with a partic., e.g. the war — the Gauls, bellum cum Gallis gestum (seldom simply bellum cum Gallis) or by the adj. of the nation with which the war is carried on, e.g. the war — the Gauls, bellum Gallicum; or by the gen. of the persons with whom the war is carried on, e.g. the war — the pirates, bellum prædonum; the war — King Pyrrhus, Pyrrhi regis bellum; (B) in company and accompanied by, (1) of persons, cum (along —); but if only expressing that one particular action refers to more than one person, it is generally rendered in Latin simply by a copulative conjunction (et, ac, atque); only poets and historians use cum for et (as in Greek ἅμα for καί), e.g. the women — their children were killed, mulieres atque infantes occisi sunt; the chief with a few noblemen is taken prisoner, dux cum aliquot principibus capitur or (as always in the historians) capiuntur; (2) of things, cum; it is often rendered in this sense (armed, furnished —, etc.) more clearly by participles or adjs., or by a relative clause, e.g. armed — a dagger, cum sicā, sicā instructus; a bag — pearls, sacculus in quo sunt margaritæ; (3) of what happened at the same time as something else, (a) with a person, cum, e.g. fuit in Ciliciā mecum tribunus militum; but if "with somebody" is = "in or on any one's person," it cannot be rendered by cum, but by apposition, e.g. — him a great poet was born, ille magnus poëta natus est; (b) with a thing, cum, e.g. — these words he returned to Rome, cum his Romam rediit; — the condition that, etc., cum eo, ut, etc.; (c) at the same time as some phenomenon that takes place in the course of time, cum, or (but less expressive) by the simple abl., e.g. — daybreak, cum primā luce, primā luce; hence also of effects and consequences that are simultaneous and immediate or direct, = not without, cum, non sine; e.g. to hear, etc. — pleasure, cum voluptate; in many instances by particular expressions, e.g. — care, diligenter, or by construction with a participle, e.g. — quickness, adhibitā celeritate; — that, inde, deinde, ad hæc.
